Dear Friends,

In the beginning, create.

That foundational truth is cultivated in our schools. Except when it's not, like in 419 public schools in New York City's lowest income neighborhoods that lack arts and music teachers of any kind.

We can't imagine a world without visual or performing arts, music or film, or any expression at all. And neither can you. Yet we sentence a quarter of a million of our most vulnerable New Yorkers to an of artless education every day.

Tonight, we officially launch #BringArtBack as the antidote to the epidemic of artlessness in public education. There are three ways you can help champion the cause, more fully described in this journal and experienced this evening.

1. Give. 2. Shop. 3. Do.

Together, we can eradicate this injustice within three years by connecting artists and youth workers with local schools as teaching artists, art directors, and mentors. Our accredited programs can be offered during or after-school. Project-based learning integrates life and art skills, as students cultivate a shared vision and bring that vision to life collaboratively. Please join us.

Thank you for your support.

In Service,

Jeremy Del Rio, Esq.
Executive Director

GIVE

Invest in Hope and Opportunity

Every $100 raised tonight provides a full semester of instruction for one student. $25,000 brings art back to a NYC school that currently lacks an art or music teacher.

Your investments support project-based learning that integrates life and art skills necessary for students to thrive in today's world. Visit the Give interactive wall to learn more and give generously.

A young girl with dark hair and bangs is smiling broadly. She has colorful body paint (purple, blue, and yellow) on her face and neck. She is wearing a purple sleeveless top with a yellow ruffled collar and a yellow flower-like detail. The background is a vibrant, abstract painting with shades of purple, blue, yellow, and red.
